

How can Miller/Howard be an ESG manager in the energy and utilities sector?

- Miller/Howard’s goal is to serve the interests of our clients, and so we work with energy and utility companies, pushing them to be better corporate citizens and sustainable businesses.
- Engagement moves industry to better practices, increased disclosure, and heightened transparency.

MILLER/HOWARD WELCOMES THIS CONVERSATION, buoyed by conviction and decades of experience in the engagement space. We focus on engagement, an effective mechanism of change through which we encourage companies to be better corporate citizens.

We speak from the perspective of realists who understand that, at such a critical time in our economy and world, we need all hands on deck.

We effect change now by engaging companies on difficult questions—moving the industry to better practices, increasing disclosure, and heightening transparency faster than regulators can. That happens with engagement.

Miller/Howard has learned that investor voices are powerful in dialogues with companies and in dialogues with regulators.

We ask companies to adhere to identified best practices, look at the long-term picture, utilize resources appropriately (including energy, water, and people), and be efficient and innovative. We work to foster working—not adversarial—relationships with company management, having found through experience and research that such an approach is best, even if the conversations can be difficult and the asks, tough.

Miller/Howard’s goal is to serve the interests of our clients and to work with companies, pushing them to be better corporate citizens and sustainable businesses. We see it less as a question of “How can we be an ESG manager in the energy sector?” and more a question of “How can we not be?”

Miller/Howard’s work intersects with the United Nations Sustainable Goals:

9 INDUSTRY INNOVATION & INFRASTRUCTURE
